THE GREAT

CANTERBURY MUSIC HALL,
OR PALACE OF GLASS,
OR PALACE OF GLASS,
Where shall I go to night!—where make my evening only—
A thomand voices seem to say, "To Cantorbury Hall,"
The mirror'd Palace of the gay Broadway,
Where every pleasure in a bright array
Of sparkling talent, greets the dazzled eye,
Driving duil care away, and raising high
The downcast spirit of the wearted frame—
Makes young the old, and lights up a flams
Of brightest pleasure in the joyful heart,
To see how perfect each one plays his part,
For every taste some food is here provided;
Perfection all, success, long since decided,
Whether in song, er dance, or fents atfliedic,
Comier recital, or the muck pathetic;
Rach taste will here be well supplied,
In favor "The Canterbury" has ta'en a rapid siride
Far in advance of all compeers;
Its proprietors have no dread fears
Of competition from its rival brotaess,
For their attractions far outrival others.
No sum too large to pay where talent offers,
Contient their pathons. But the proprietors
And for the rest they've not a single fear.
Here nightly may be soon as tripping it so graffs Sam Cowell too—the king of comic ditty.

No equid has he in this or other city;
For who, like he, can frame his pilant face,
To all occasions, and in every case
Draw thunders of applause, whilst laughter rings
Thro'out the hall, no matter what he sings—
Billy Barlow, Lord Lovell, Cork Leg, or Reuben Wrig
At Canterbury Hall he sings each night;
And if a "mind diseased" should rark your brain,
Ge hear Sam Cowell—you'll soon be right again.
Next comes the gallant Bloudin, miracle of daring.
Stopping at naught for death, nor danger caring;
The hero of Nisgara, above whose torrent flood
Fearless and undaunted, has he often stood,
Whilst all the world amazed, applaud the wond'rous a
And scarce believe his doings were a fact:
Here will each night this dauntions hero reign.
And cross, in mimic scene, Nisgara's flood again.
The Sylphide of the dance, the beautoous Mariota,
Who once has seen can be cagain forget or;
Who once has seen can be cagain forget or;
Turning a pirouette and turning young men's heads.
A host of other stars here shine each night.
And one opinion is expressed by all,
That foremost in the ranks stands
CANTERBURY HALL.
